Sea ice and polar bears: The sea ice in the Arctic is getting smaller each year. In some areas, it melts completely in the summer. This is causing problems for polar bears. These beautiful white bears go onto the sea ice to find their food. This means that they are in danger because they can't find enough food to eat.

Bamboo and giant pandas: giant pandas live in the mountains in the south central China. They eat bamboo, which is 90% of their diet. But bamboo grow very slowly, so the climate change could cause problems. If there isn't enough bamboo, then pandas won't survive.

Global warming and diseases: Scientists are worried because as the Earth gets hotter, there will be more diseases. These can be passed from humans to gorillas, so they might be in danger in the future.

Mountain gorillas live in central Africa. In some ways, they can adapt well to climate change. They can live in high temperatures. But there are very few mountain gorillas left in the world. We think there are only about 1100, so we must protect them from diseases.
